cratism no slaves. If it makes Rothschilds, it makes abundance of those things for which others gladly exchange money, and it gives what money cannot purchase, a life of health and peace. What more than this can be expected of any general occupation in life? In the nature of things, all cannot be rich, for riches is a comparative term. All cannot be distinguished, for distinction implies inferiority somewhere. The conclusion must be, that it is to the more restlessness of a selfish ambition, which nothing can satisfy, rather than the cool judgment of a broad philanthropy, which renders so many dissatisfied with the employment which is the right arm of power in New England. Upon the whole it is probably true, that the condition of the farmer in New England is better now, all things considered, than that of any other whole class of our citizens, and its prospects are brightening every day.

Advances in knowledge of the principles of agriculture, improvements in the modes of cultivation, and in farming implements, in the breeds of stock, in the varieties of fruits; the effects of steam navigation in bringing distant markets near—a thousand circumstances are tending to encourage the farmer, and elevate his position. But to maintain this position, he must be awake and in earnest. He must bring to his business the same energy, the same industry, the same systematic efforts, which are essential to success in other pursuits. He must understand his business thoroughly, and be conversant with his fellow-men, and by reading the best publications of the day, avail himself of every means of improvement.

Again, the farmer needs to learn to appreciate the advantages of his situation and to cherish a proper spirit of thankfulness. A should learn that money is not wealth. A quaint old writer illustrates this idea by telling of a man who labored hard all the time for money, which he expended in buying books and shoes, which he carefully laid away and kept, which enough, he concludes, was the wise as to treasure up gold and silver which one will never use.

The farmer regards the minister's salary of six hundred dollars as a generous support for his family, but if he would consider, that for his own farm he derives his rent, and fuel, and meat, and milk, and butter, and vegetables, and a thousand minor articles for which the salary must be paid away—he would offer up sacrifice, the cash value of what he and his family thus unusually consume, he should find, to his surprise, that his own family must practice a far more rigid economy than now to live upon so small a sum!

Is Farming profitable in New England? If to be quickly rich in gold and silver, if to live in luxury and indolence, if to gain individual power and distinction among men,—if these alone "profits make," then the question must be answered in the negative.

But if to have a home of quiet and refinement, with abundance of the comforts of life, with advantages for social, intellectual, and religious cultivation, unequalled elsewhere, with "neither poverty nor riches" to "clog us with weary days and restless nights," if to gain our daily bread by healthful labor, and gain it, too, with the consciousness, that our gain is not a soldier's loss; if to occupy a position of comparative exemption from the cares and perplexities which attend professional or mercantile life—

"Our best companions, innocence and health,
And our best wisdom, ignorance of wealth,"

if this be "profitable," then is the occupation of the Farmer, in the highest degree, to himself, to his household, and to humanity, a profitable employment.

H. F. FRENCH.

Exeter, N. H., Dec. 29, 1851.

Duncan and North American Railroad.—The Senate yesterday voted to reconsider the vote by which they rejected the bill, for letting its credit on certain conditions, to a limited amount, in aid of this enterprise. It's probable that the question on the passage of the bill will again come up for consideration to-day. Our readers will recollect that we have never been very sanguine of the practicality of raising the means for the construction of this great work, which must rely chiefly on resources to be raised by the people of Maine, and of the two lower British Provinces, with, such aid as the latter may obtain from the British Government. But we have never hesitated in the opinion, that if the local benefits promised by the enterprise are such as to induce those who are much more competent, than the people of this State can be, to judge of its practicability and success, to furnish the means necessary to insure its completion, with the aid of some limited contributions to it from the State, it may be for the interest of this Commonwealth to lend its aid to a moderate extent. There can be no doubt that the work, if accomplished, in time befitting the State of Maine, will be indirectly beneficial to the people of this State. The bill now pending proposes that this State shall lend the enterprise by the loan of a credit for a limited portion of the necessary funds, on the condition that a large sum shall be previously raised, the whole of which shall be pledged for securing the State against any loss from the liability which it shall assume.

The prospect of obtaining the necessary means for the prosecution of the work, in Maine and the Provinces, appears to be more favorable at the present time than at any former period, and it is important that any aid which it is the intention of this States to afford, should be offered now.—[Boston Adv. 11th.

Handsome Compliment to an American Captain.—Capt. Billings, of the American ship Mary Ann, has received quite an ovation from the Chamber of Commerce of Rouen. A complete Atlas of marine, charts, and a collection of views in the city of Rouen, were presented to him for having been the first American Captain, who had ever undertaken to bring a sea going vessel that distance up the Seine. In his reply to the Chamber, we observe, the enterprising captain gave an account of the difficulties he had met, with, in obtaining a cargo for so adventurous a voyage; of the advice he had received from his friends, and from the administration of the New Orleans Custom House, to give up an undertaking which was pronounced impossible, for a vessel of the tonnage of the Mary Ann. Later in the day the captain, who was decidedly in luck, received from the Society of Commerce and industry, a medal which it had caused to be struck, "in commemoration of the happy arrival in their midst of the first American three-master, the Mary Ann." Towards nightfall he received orders for as much cotton as he could bring upon his second voyage, and at sundown a steamtug was placed at his disposal, to tow him back to Havre.

[Sav. Republican.

Fenova O'Connor.—This eccentric gentleman, whose arrival was announced in the European yesterday, has been reported in the English papers as insane. We should think from some of his earliest proceedings in this country, that the report is not far out of the way. Hostrolling into Stewart's store yesterday, and chucking a handsome young gentleman under the purchasers chin, as we are informed, asked her how she would like a husband. He was ejected from the premises, and afterwards returned but did not renew any of his wild freaks. It is said that he left England without the knowledge of his friends, and that they will soon follow him by the next steamer.—[N. Y. Evening Post, 5th.

Mephistopheles.—Even at the worst of their feelings men may meditate; they think of God, and of things pertaining to holiness, without any fear of them, or aversion to their worldly employments. By the very letting up of the rein, a thought of heaven may fall in, and of the unity of our Creator. And the truer work of heaven is, to persuade us not to be in awful fear of the divine power and wisdom.—Pusey.

THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1852.

The Ellsworth Herald, in complaining of the intermeddling of personal hatreds, with the duties of school committees, sensibly remarks:

"We believe that are committee able to decide upon the most desirable class books without the dictation of any of the servants of book-firms in Portland or New York. And certain it is that the people know best in whom they can trust."

Had it not been for the energy and hostility of the publishers to the Mandeville's System of reading, this State would now have been doomed to the sad condition of plodding along in the old way of spreading as a load instead of being in the enjoyment of the advantages of a most valuable and important system of reading which has been discovered, but one of reading which has been discovered, but one of reading which has been discovered, but one
